Recovery Housing

About Recovery Housing

Recovery housing provides structure and support for those living in recovery and allows a safe environment for individuals to continue to heal from the impacts of addiction. Staff are committed to helping residents gain life skills, make healthy decisions, and strengthen their recovery. Residents attend group meetings, individual counseling, and weekly case management sessions.

Often, after completing residential treatment for substance use disorders, clients return to the same living situation that had supported their addiction, and are faced with the same challenges and temptations they had before. Many of these environments are toxic. While clients have changed during treatment, their living environment has not. This is why recovery housing can be an effective support program in the continuum of care for behavioral health services.

"Living at the Ripple House has helped me tremendously at making this attempt at recovery so much more successful than my prior attempts. The ladies are so encouraging and supportive of each other on a regular basis. Of course, we all have our trials and tribulations. Life is life, and life in recovery is very hard, as it is the opposite of how we lived and what we knew before. Life is much better for me here than how I was living previously. The Community and Employers have been very supportive and open to welcoming us. I am even learning to laugh again...." -- Resident from the Ripple Recovery Residence in L'Anse, Michigan
